EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE Third Volume of the Corporation Diary, from 1630 to 1640, embraces those ten years of seeming tranquillity which preceded the convulsion of the Great Civil War:—a period which has been characterized by Prof. S. R. Gardiner as "the Personal Government of Charles the First." It may be desirable to say a few words as to the state of affairs at this period, so far as they affected the Town of Reading.

POLITICAL EVENTS. During this long interval no Parliament was summoned in England, and the measures employed by the King to raise a sufficient revenue for the purposes of Government were of such an arbitrary character as to render his administration unpopular, and to arouse a smouldering spirit of discontent throughout the country. In the course of this volume we shall find frequent references to these vexatious and often obsolete methods of indirect Taxation:—such as the levying of Ship-Money in a time of profound peace; heavy fines imposed for declining to accept the honour of Knighthood, and even for the discontinuance of the practice of Archery. Notwithstanding these extreme measures, it was barely possible to carry on the ordinary expenditure of the Kingdom, and the feeling of irritation against Taxation, without Representation, continued to increase year by year.

With this growth of political grievances there were at the same time other causes of discontent. A large party in the Church longed for its further reformation on Calvinistic lines, and were impatient of the severe and rigorous laws which had been passed for the enforcement of Uniformity in doctrine and discipline. References will be found in this Volume to the unpopular Courts of the Star Chamber and High Commission. The case of Lodowick Bowyer, in 1633 (recorded on p. 207), is an instance of the barbarous sentences inflicted by the Star Chamber, which caused this Court to be regarded as an engine of tyranny and made it a byword of hatred throughout the Kingdom. Again, the Foreign policy of the Court had been disastrous both in France and Spain. As regards Germany the loss of the Palatinate was still felt as a National dishonour; while the old hostility against the House of Austria, which sought to enforce the Roman obedience by the subversion of Protestantism, was stronger than ever. The Order of Council for the enrolment of 6,000 English Volunteers, to be employed in the service of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden (page 73), was cheerfully adopted by the Townsmen of Reading, who bore the charges of ten Volunteers for this service, in 1631 ; and the Portrait of the great Protestant King, the "Lion of the North," still occupies a place of honour in the Council Chamber of Reading.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS. The most memorable event in our Municipal transactions at this time was the obtaining of a new Charter from the Crown, enlarging in several respects the Charter conferred by Queen Elizabeth. The Charter of Charles the First, dated at Westminster, December 17, 1638, contained the following special provisions :—(1) Instead of the Nine Capital and Sixteen Secondary Burgesses, appointed by the Charter of Elizabeth, there were to be, in future, Thirteen Aldermen (of whom the Mayor was to be one), with Twelve Assistants, a Steward of the Borough (now Recorder), to be elected by the Mayor and Aldermen, and two Burgesses to be elected as Chamberlains. Virtually the chief authority was in the hands of the Mayor and Aldermen, although the Assistants could vote in the election of a Mayor. (2) Ample powers were conferred for the government and regulation of Trade and for holding property to an enlarged amount. (3) The Mayor, Deputy Mayor, the Bishop of the Diocese (Salisbury), or his Chancellor, the Senior Alderman, or the last precedent Mayor, to be Justices of the Peace, two of which may be a Quorum, the Mayor, or Deputy Mayor, being one.

It is noticeable that the preamble to this Charter emphatically asserts those exalted claims of high prerogative which subsequently led to the outbreak of the Civil War. We may remark that the Charter of Charles the First, modified by some trifling changes in succeeding reigns, was practically the governing Charter of the Municipality until the Corporation Reform Act of 1836. It is to be hoped that this and other valuable Charters in the possession of the Corporation may be published hereafter in a separate volume.

At the close of this Volume (in 1640) we arrive at that eventful period of English History, which was to decide the long impending struggle between the Crown and the Commons. In the 'Short' Parliament, which met April 13, and was unwisely dissolved by the King on May 5, the two Members returned for Reading were Sir Edward Herbert, Solicitor-General, at the request of Laud, and Sir John Berkeley, on the nomination of Lord Holland, the High Steward. Both resigned within a few days, and on April 30, Sir Francis Knollys, Sen., and his son, Sir Francis Knollys, Jun., were elected in their stead. The famous Long Parliament was summoned on Nov. 3 in the same year. An attempt was made by Lord Holland to obtain the nomination of his son-in-law, Sir James Thynne, as one of the Members. But the times were too serious for such interference: so that Sir Francis Knollys and his son were again returned to represent the Town of Reading in that memorable Assembly.

TRADE AND COMMERCE. In spite of the efforts made to revive the Cloth trade by the munificent endowment of John Kendrick, in 1624, it seems to have been gradually declining as the staple industry of Reading, and we find the Corporation petitioning the Council of State to place it on a better footing. The abuse of Monopolies, especially in the sale of Tobacco, was also a subject of complaint; and the restrictions against freedom of Trade were a constant source of irritation. The old jealousy against "foreigners," or aliens, still existed, and none were allowed to exercise any trade or handicraft in the Town unless they had been previously admitted as freemen. Under this rigorous system of Protection, the commerce of the Town developed but slowly.

Notwithstanding these drawbacks, we may describe the condition of Reading during the ten years previous to the Civil War as being on the whole prosperous and improving. It increased considerably in population, and extent of buildings. In 1632 and 1635 we find notices of Emigration to the Colonies of New England and the Bermudas. By a Royal order, obtained through the intervention of Archbishop Laud, various improvements were effected, in the removal of the Shambles from the principal thoroughfare, and in the paving of the Causeways. The Diary during these ten years reveals a state of marked progress; and if the interference with trade by Royal Proclamation was sometimes injurious, yet it occasionally led to advantageous reforms in the internal government, and sanitary condition of the Town.

SOCIAL ASPECTS. With regard to the Social condition of Reading at this time, we find constant allusions to the prevalence of the Plague, which broke out in 1637 with great virulence, having spread from London to the adjacent Counties. Prompt measures seem to have been taken by the Corporation for its suppression. Eight cottages in the Conduit Close were assigned as Pest-Houses to isolate those visited with the contagion. In these days when the erection of an Infectious Hospital in Reading is so strongly advocated by Medical experts, the example of our predecessors may be worthy of imitation.

Much light is thrown by the Diary upon the habits and customs of this period. Stringent regulations were enforced for the observance of Lent. There was a general belief in the existence of Witchcraft, and cruel punishments were inflicted on those suspected of its practice. The terrible severity of the Criminal code at this time was such, that at one Assize no less than 13 men and youths were condemned to execution; while we find in constant use the infliction of the Pillory, the Stocks, the Cucking Stool, the Whipping Post, and the horrible flagellation known as "Carting." The fines for Swearing formed an important item in the revenue. A Spartan discipline existed for the young, so that unruly Apprentices and troublesome Street-boys were publicly whipped in the Town Hall. In the Borough Prison no reformatory element existed, and the Gaolers were often little better than the inmates.

In the matter of public recreation there seems to have been little or no provision. The austere Puritanism of the age had already set its condemnation on the acting of Stage Plays, on Athletic Sports and other amusements; thus we find in 1631 a Company of Players refused the use of the Town Hall, and on another occasion being actually paid twenty shillings "to forbear their playe," and leave the Town.

Municipal Charities (Educational and Eleemosynary).

To this period and even earlier in the century we may attribute the foundation of many of those Municipal Charities, which have shed lustre on the memory and public spirit of past benefactors. The names of John and William Kendrick remind us of the old "Oracle," an institution for promoting the Cloth-trade of the Town, but whose ample endowments were forfeited by the neglect of a later generation, excepting that small portion, which has sufficed to establish an admirable school, bearing their honoured name. To this period also belong John and Richard Johnson, the wealthy mercers of St. Laurence, whose doles are still distributed to the poor and needy; also Sir Thomas Vachell, Lord of the Manor of Coley; also John Blagrave, whose quaint benevolence bequeathed a gratuity of 20 nobles to one out of three Maids chosen from each Parish, who (in memory of the seamless robe of our Lord for which the Roman soldiers cast lots) should make the largest throw of dice on Good Friday, but whose gift is now distributed in a manner more consistent with modern ideas. To these may be added other pious donors, whose aim was to bestow relief on the aged and distressed poor.

But the most conspicuous benefactor of Reading at this date was the great Archbishop, whom the Town still numbers amongst her most illustrious sons. It would be improper in a work like this to speak of Laud's public career, either as a Statesman or as a Prelate and Church Reformer. In his lifetime he provoked many enmities. No man of his day was so often assailed by the shafts of fierce invective. But tardy justice is now rendered to his memory, and we are capable of acknowledging his profound piety, his high standard of duty, his discriminating patronage of learning and learned men, irrespective of party. Of his many claims to veneration we may adduce his unceasing benefits to his native Town as among the chief. William Laud was born in 1573, educated at the Royal Grammar School of King Henry VII., proceeded to St. John's College, Oxford, on Sir Thomas White's foundation, and speedily made his mark at the University. Whether as head of his College, as Parish priest, as Cathedral dignitary, or as the occupant in succession of the Sees of St. David's, Bath and Wells, London, and Canterbury, he was a 'restorer of waste places,' and never filled an office without leaving proofs of his munificent and unselfish character. With true nobility of spirit he never despised his humble origin or forgot his early friends. To him Reading is still indebted for a Deed of Gift, conferring an endowment upon the impoverished Church of St. Laurence, augmenting the scanty stipend of the Master of its ancient Grammar-School, and bestowing timely help to portionless Maidens, and to Youths qualified for Apprenticeship.

Numerous instances occur in this portion of the Diary of the active interest which he took in the prosperity of the Town. To his good offices at Court, where he was now one of the chief advisers of the Crown, the Corporation were indebted for some of the most favorable terms in the new Charter, and for the settlement of a protracted lawsuit connected with the Kendrick estate. This good feeling appears to have been heartily reciprocated by the Inhabitants. He was frequently consulted in matters of moment to their welfare. At the summoning of the Short Parliament in April, 1640, Laud's recommendation of the choice of Sir

Edward Herbert as their Representative was complied with. Upon his Metropolitical Visitation of the Southern Province in 1638, when the ordinary jurisdiction of the Diocesan Bishops was superseded, his Chancellor visited Reading and was received with marked attention. Nor during his long imprisonment in the Tower does there seem to have been any abatement of the esteem and respect entertained for him by the Corporation. His Portrait still hangs in the Council Chamber, with this inscription :—

"To the Memory of Dr. William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury: who was a liberal Benefactor to this Town, which was honoured with his Birth: After he had many years served the Church, under the Defenders of the Faith, King James and King Charles the Martyr, he was solemnly murdered by a faction of Rebels upon Tower Hill, London, the 10th day of January, A.D. 1644, ætatis suæ 74." [164$\frac{4}{5}$, ætat. 72.]

General Notes on the MS. Diary, 1630–40.

It will be noticed in this Volume that between May 24 and June 27, 1637, when a new book (No. 3) of the Diary begins, several Entries of the years 1630-37 occur, dating backwards from the end of the MS. With two exceptions, these are not of much importance, being chiefly lists of persons admitted to the Freedom of the Borough, either by apprenticeship or composition, with their payments, as noted down by the Town Clerk, or Steward of the Borough for the time being. Two of these Entries, however, are of some interest. (1) An event is noted which occurred 20 years subsequently, viz. on Sept. 14, 1657, and which confirms the value of the Diary as an official record. It states that the Diary was exhibited as Evidence at the trial of an action, in which the Mayor and Corporation were defendants. See p. 375. (2) A riotous attempt of the Poor to seize Corn in the Market-place. See p. 379. No date is affixed to this Entry, but it may probably be assigned to the year 1631, when a great scarcity of Corn prevailed in Reading, and measures were taken by the Corporation to provide a public Granary for the relief of the Poor. See pp. 45, 66, 68.

As an illustration of the style and handwriting of this period, two facsimile pages of the MS. Diary are inserted in this Volume to face pages 179 and 480.

Katherine Hobson, the wief of Thomas Hobson, of Shoolane in the parishe of St. Bride's in London, Surrey. It is justified to her face that shee sayd my doctrine, yf my people followed it, would bring them to hell. Shee came to my howse, upbraids mee with want of manners to beleeve lies, that I was not temperate, fitter to goe to sleepe then to talke. She sayde to my face that my misdemeanour would bring my people to hell.

p. 187. [Boroughe of Readinge in comitatu Berks, scilicet, in margin.]

At a Councell and meeting held for the said Boroughe on Wednesday, the vij^th^ of Marche [April ?] 1631, Before Mr. John Newman, Mayour, Sir Edward Clerke, Knight, John Saunders, Esq., then assisting.

Head Burgesses.

Mr. Nicholas Gunter, Mr. Roger Knight, Mr. Christopher Turnour, Mr. William Kendricke.

At this day John Puckridge, apprentice to Humfrey Milles, of Reading aforesaid, mercer, complayned that having served his Master five yeares and more within two yeares and lesse of the full time of his apprenticehood, and his Master finding he intended to keepe a Mercer's shoppe in Reading when his tyme was out, hath sought and pretended occasions to put him away from his service thereby to debar him of his freedome. And thereuppon hath turned him from his service denyeing to receive him uppon any termes or to finde him another service in the Towne where to serve his yeares.

Uppon which complaint soe made the said Mayor and the said Hed Burgesses his brethren, called the said Puckridge and his said Master before them (having first given convenyent warning of the cause of their convencion) and they hearing at lardge the complaint of the said Puckridge and the reasons and allegacions of the said Master, according to their discretions and as the equitie of the case appearing before them required. First (after severe admonishment of the said Puckridge to the duties and faithfull service of an apprentice and amendment of what had beene amisse) did with one consent order that the said Humfrey Milles should fourthwith receive againe and take his said apprentice into his service to serve him as an apprentice during the residue of his apprenticehood yet to come, with this care and caution, neverthelesse on the behalfe of the said Humfrey Milles who, pretending the said Puckridge had delt deceiptfully with him, that Mr. Thomas Brackley, father-in-law to the said apprentice, a verie honest and able man in estate, should become bound in the some of 100*li.* for the future truth and faithfull dealing of the said apprentice duringe the whole residue of his apprenticehood yet to come. Accordinge to which order the said Puckridge tendered his service unto the said Humfrey Milles (protesting and voweing to become unto him a most faithfull servant, and the said Brackley tendered to seale unto a bond prepared as directed by the said order, but the said Humfrey wilfully refused and doth refuse either to accept of the said bond or of his said servant.

Berks, scilicet, Sessio Pacis domini Regis tenta apud Newbery in comitatu predicto die Martis, scilicet x° die Aprilis, anno Domini 1632.

Whereas the differences betweene Humfrey Mills of Reading, mercer, and John Puckridge his apprentice were heard and examined by Sir Edward Clerke, Knight, and John Saunders, Esq., two of his Majestie's Justices of the Peace of the said County, and by John Newman, Mayour of Reading, Mr. Nicholas Gunter, Mr. Roger Knight, Mr. Christofer Turnour and Mr. William Kendricke, Head Burgesses of Reading aforesaid, and by them thereuppon ordered that uppon securitie of 100*li.* given by Mr. Thomas Brackley, the said Apprentice's father, the said Humfrey Mills should receive his said apprentice into his service during the residue of his apprenticehood, which notwithstanding the said Humfrey did refuse to doe; Now it is ordered by the Court uppon hearing of both parties that the said cause shalbe againe heard before the said Justices of Peace, Mayour and Head Burgesses and by them ordered as they shall find cause: and in the meane tyme the said Humfrey Mills to receive into his service and keeping the said Puckridge his apprentice untill further order be made; and if the said Humfrey Mills shall refuse to performe such order alreadie made, if the same shall not be altered, such other order as shalbe made, then he is to be bound to the good behaviour and [3] to appeare at the next Sessions.

3° die Junii, 1634. Mr. Robert Maulthus, Maiour, Sir Edward Clerke, Knight, John Saunders, Esquire.

Informacions and complaintes.

Assises. Clemens Bonevant, wief of the said Edward, saith that about 5 or 6 weekes since her husband was first taken with shaking fittes after a strange and unusuall manner, and thereuppon advisinge with Mr. Dr. Bird about his sicknes, the Dr. could not tell the cause of his sicknes, but found him to be verye weake. And the said

Edward contynued soe about 3 weekes, and then recovered and went abroad, and was reasonable well for about 7 or 8 dayes, and then fell agayne into his fittes as formerly, or worse, and soe contynueth.

She saith alsoe that sometymes his fittes hold him 7 or 8 howers togither, and sometymes but for 4 or 5 howers, and sometymes for lesse tyme. In his fittes all his joyntes and lymmes are taken with a shakinge in that violent manner that 2 or 3 must hold him, which drives him into muche sweatinge and other distemperature; in his fittes he cannott speake, but makes a shreekinge noise, and knowes noe-bodye.

When his fittes are of him and ceasse, then he knowes them that come to him and talkes very sensible, and then saith that in his fittes he feeles as it were a mouse run up and downe within him. And she saith that he is not free of his fittes when at the longest not above halfe an hower at a tyme.

Shee saith that on Saturdaye last was fortnight, the said Edith Walls meetinge this Examinante, did muche revile this Examinant, callinge her whoore and usinge other revilinge speaches against her. Afterwardes this Examinante's husband, meetinge the said Edith Walls, did reproove her for revilinge this Examinant. And thereuppon the said Edith did use many revilinge speeches against the said Edward and told him that he the said Edward should goe noe more to his Master's. And the next daye at eveninge, beinge Sundaye, the said Edward fell into his fitts agayne, and his fitts have beene worse since, then they were in the tyme of his former fitts.

Jone Greene, wife of Thomas Greene, of Readinge.

Saith that she beinge often with the said Edward Bonavent since his last fallinge ill, the said Edward hath often said that he thought in his conscience that [he] was troubled with some ill spiritt, and that Walls and his wife were the occasion and meanes of his beinge soe ill, and that he could not put that out of his minde.

And the said Jone Greene saith she heard William Walls saye, on Saturdaye last was a fortnight, to the said Edward Bonavent, Thou hast beene pretye well hoysted, but I will hoyst the better yett.

William Walls examyned.

Saith his wief and he have oftentymes byn abused and reviled by bad neighbours, but he and his wief are free and not guiltye of any manner of witchecraft.

Jone Pettie, Elizabeth Hickes, Agnes Card, Elizabeth Cheiffe, Ellyn Halpenye, Jone Greene, Ellyn Burley and Alice Osborn did searche and had other viewe of the bodye of Edith Walls, and said they found her not as other weomen ; but that uppon the searche of her bodye, they finde under her armepitt somethinge like a nipple, but more soft and flaggye, and the like in her hippe, and in her privie partes somethinge like a teate. Verte folium.

[p. 300.] Eodem die.

Searchers { William Duglace, William Kinge, Henry Mapleton, Izaak Wracke, Thomas Alder, John Mabberley } havinge the viewe and searchinge of the bodye of William Walls, suspected of witchcraft, doe all saye that he is a man as other men be, not having teat bigg or small about his bodye, but a blewe spott or ij, whiche they did pricke, and bledd.

There be divers other informacions and complaintes against the said William Walls and his wief of suspition of witchcraft. Vide le3 file.

The said Edith Walls comitted to the Gaole.

Nathaniell Mason, of the Universitie of Cambridge, Master of Artes, one of the sonnes of the keeper of Bedford gaole, informeth that Elizabeth Hill, the wief of Edward Hill nowe prisoner in Reading gaole, did breake the gaole at Bedford in the county of Bedford and there hence escaped sithence the last Assises holden at Bedford, and that she is nowe lurkinge near about this towne of Readinge.

* Marked as absent.

[Assises, in margin.] Th'examinacion of Elizabeth Hill, &c.

Whoe saith she is the wief of Edward Hill, nowe a prisoner in Readinge gaole, and that her husband and she were heretofore prisoners in Bedford gaole at the last Assizes there holden; and that about 7 or 8 weekes since the last Assises her husband and she togither with one William Bridges and Dorothie his wief in the night tyme did escape and goe fourth of the gaole at and by the utter dore of the gaole; but by what meanes the dore was opened she knoweth not. And that she for her parte hath byn about this Towne all this weeke past, and lodged in the Gaole with her husband every night.

She had noe companye: but she hath a childe aged a yeare and haulf kept in this towne of Readinge, at the house of an old woman called [blank], paid for by the moneth; and that her husband and shee have spent their tyme in divers places, but most about Westminster. Comitted to Gaole.

William Staunton, the keeper of his Majestie's gaole at Readinge, complayneth that he had in his custodye the bodyes of Daniell Wickam and Marye his wief and Thomas Cooke and Anne his wief committed into his keepinge for severall felonies by them committed.

And for that uppon Wensdaye, the xxth daye of this Januarye, about viij of the clocke in the night tyme, all iiij^or escaped fourth of the said Gaole, all the doores and lockes in and about the said Gaole fast lockt and shutt in the next morninge.

And further saith that he suspecteth that one William Turnour, a shereman, beinge his hired servant and put in trust aswell to oversee and looke to his clothinge busynes, as to his prisoners in his absence, and to doe all suche busynes as he had for him to doe in and about the Gaole and houshould affaires, knoweing this complainant to be at London, was the onely meanes that those prisoners did escape out of the Gaole.

For the next daye after the night in whiche they escaped, being Thursdaye, he the said William Turnour, without any leave or consent of his Dame or any of his Master's familye, went careleslye awaye at his owne pleasure, and was absent from his Master's service untill the Saturdaye then next followeinge.

The examynacion of the said William Turnour.

Whoe saith that he hath lived in Readinge about haulf a yeare with William Staunton, the gaoler, as his hired servant, takinge v*s.* a weeke wages, and findinge himself meate and drinke, doeinge suche busynes in dressinge his cloth and dyeinge his wooll, and sometimes to looke to the prisoners, (but not as under-gaoler).

And saith alsoe that he was acquaynted with Daniell Wickam and his wief, and with Thomas Cooke and his wief, soe longe as they were in the Gaole, but not before. And that his master at his goeinge to London willed him to have care of his clothinge busynes, but not of the Gaole, nor of any prisoners therein.

And further this Examinate saith that, in the afternoone his master William Staunton went to London, he spent some tyme in the companye of the said Thomas Cooke and Daniell Wickam in drinkinge in the Gaole in the company of another man, beinge a Worcestershiere man, whose name he remembreth not. But denyeth that he fetcht the keyes of the dungeon out of his Master's chamber to lett William Wickam out to fetche a boxe he had in the kitchen, and Thomas Cooke to have some victualls after they were lockt in the dungeon, but at their knockinge he found the keyes in the doore and lett them fourth, to fetche suche thinges, and staid with them above untill they were put downe again into the dungeon, trustinge to the maides lockinge of them in, whiche was about ix of the clocke or past, before [they] went to bed; and he lodged all that night in the house, and on Thursdaye morninge the prisoners were gone; he spent his tyme about the house and would have gone to a cunninge woman, or to a cunning man, as he was directed, but his Dame was not willing he should doe soe.

The confession of Isaack Treherne.

Whoe, beinge demaunded howe longe he had knowne Edward Hill, now a prisoner in the Gaole, and by what meanes he knewe him and had acquayntaunce with him, saith in the last yeare this Examinate dwelt in the Crowne, the said Edward Hill lodged one tyme and one night in the said house as a guest. And sithence this

* Marked as absent.

Examinate dwelt from the Crowne, the said Edward Hill lodged one night at the house where this Examinate now dwelleth and had noe companye with him. And about a quarter of a yeare or more past, the said Hill and his wief, with a childe, came ridinge uppon a good horse to this Examinate's house and would have lodged there, but this Examinate could not enterteyne them, but got them lodgeinge at the Crowne, and that is all the acquayntance he had with him, and did never see nor knowe of any goodes he carryed or brought with him. And as toucheinge the placinge of the said Hill's childe in the Towne this Examinate is ignorant and knewe not of it.

The confession of [blank] Trehearne, the wief of the said Isaacke Treherne.

Whoe, beinge examined concerninge the said Edward Hill, saith she had noe acquayntaunce with him in any other manner then thus, about a quarter of a yeare or more nowe past, the said Edward Hill came to her house with his wief and childe, and horse, requestinge lodgeinge, and she, beinge not provided for them all, gott them lodgeing at the Crowne, for when she dwelt at the Crowne the said Edward Hill did lodge there once, and but once to her knowledge; but as touchinge the placinge or leavinge of their childe in the Towne, she is altogither ignorant.

And further saith that about vij or viij weekes past the said Edward Hill and ij or iij other men in his companye came to her house, but stayed not one hower; all of them went awaye togither. And that night the said Edward Hill returned himself and lodged there that night alone, and what became of the rest of his companye this Examinate knoweth not.

And further saith shee did never see or receave any plate or other goodes that the said Edward Hill or any of his companye had in their keepinge or brought into her house at any tyme.
